Description:

In the heart of Prineville, Oregon, sits a practical yet efficient structure known as the Box Hangar. Its dimensions, 55 feet wide by 50 feet long, provide ample space for aviation needs, while its features cater to both functionality and comfort.

From the outside, the hangar appears sturdy and unassuming, constructed of durable materials to withstand the region's weather conditions. A Schweiss hangar door stands ready to open, revealing the interior's offerings.

Upon entry, visitors encounter a straightforward layout designed for convenience. To the right, a private bathroom offers a necessary amenity for pilots and guests.

Adjacent to the bathroom, an office space provides a designated area for administrative tasks and flight planning. Natural light streams through large windows, offering views of the surroundings and creating a pleasant atmosphere.

Further inside, a flexible space awaits, adaptable to various purposes such as aircraft maintenance, storage, or relaxation between flights. This area reflects the hangar's practicality, accommodating the diverse needs of its users.

At the center of it all, the hangar's spacious interior provides shelter for aircraft, with enough room for different sizes and models. Its utilitarian design serves the practical requirements of aviation enthusiasts, offering a safe haven for their vehicles.

Prineville's favorable flying weather, boasting approximately 300 days of suitable conditions, adds to the hangar's appeal, providing ample opportunities for flight and exploration. Within this unassuming Box Hangar, pilots find a functional space where their passion for aviation can thrive.
